

Dear FCC,

One of the greatest reliefs in recent history has been the implementation of the no call list. In the past, almost every dinner had been interrupted by one or more phone calls. We got in the habit of letting the answering machine take all phone calls during mealtime. Then we simply deleted the messages. The companies calling did not get my business any more than if they had not called. Mealtime is very important, and businesses do not have the right to infringe on that. If I need a service or product, I will seek it out. Please make no changes to this law.
